GUAM DAILY POST • TUESDAY, MARCH 15, 2022

Helicopter safety fraud trial begins today

Kenneth Crowe Phillip Kapp Marvin Reed Randall Rogers John Walker

By Nick Delgado
nick@postguam.com

Federal prosecutors will present their opening statement to a jury today in a fraud case involving Hansen Helicopters Inc. and several defendants.

Multiple defense attorneys will also be given about an hour each to conduct their opening arguments before District Court of Guam Chief Judge Frances Tydingco-Gatewood.

It took several weeks for a jury to be selected.

John Walker, owner of Hansen, and company officials Marvin Reed, Kenneth Crowe and Phillip Kapp are defendants in the case. Randall Rogers of Spares Inc. is a co-defendant.

The Hansen defendants are accused of obtaining aircraft that had been destroyed, scrapped or deemed not airworthy, and then falsifying documents and records submitted to government agencies to obtain airworthiness certificates for those same aircraft, a federal report states.

The charges include multiple counts of conspiracy to defraud the Federal Aviation Administration and National Transportation Safety Board.

According to the initial May 2018 indictment, beginning as early as 1997, Walker, Reed, Crowe, and Kapp circumvented U.S. aviation safety regulations to maximize profits at Hansen Helicopters.

A Hansen aircraft crashed on Sept. 2, 2015, killing pilot Rafael Antonio Cruz Santos. Hansen later gave FAA logbook entries that falsely indicated certain inspections and maintenance had been performed on the aircraft that crashed.

An FAA safety inspector, Timothy J. Cislo, pleaded guilty in 2019 for issuing or reissuing special airworthiness certificates for several helicopters belonging to Hansen without inspecting them, a U.S. Department of Transportation Office of Inspector General investigation found. Cislo accepted a bribe – a Taylorcraft BC-12D aircraft valued at around $20,000 from Hansen and its employees, according to the OIG.

Hansen operated aerial tours and tuna-spotting services for international fishing operations and provided charter services for federal agencies to locations in the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands otherwise inaccessible by air.

Thousands stuck in Thailand as sanctions squeeze Russia

BANGKOK (Reuters) - Thousands of tourists from Russia are currently stranded in Thailand, officials said Tuesday, as unprecedented Western sanctions over the invasion of Ukraine cut a squeeze on Russians struggling to find flights and finances.

Flight cancellations, a ruble currency in free fall and payment problems from Russian banks being cut off from the global SWIFT system has left more than 7,000 Russians in limbo in locations like Phuket, Koh Samui, Pattaya and Krabi, Thailand's tourism authority chief said.

"We have to be good hosts and take care of everybody," Yuthasak Supasorn told Reuters.

"There are still Russian tourists on their way here," he added.

Russia's embassy in Bangkok did not immediately respond to request or comment on its citizens.

In 2019, Thailand received 1.4 million Russian visitors. In January, it counted about 23,000 Russians, representing about a fifth of the total arrivals.

About half of those stranded were on the island of Phuket.

"We've asked hotels to reduce prices and extend their stays," Phuket's tourism association president Bhumikitti Ruktaengam said.

Some visitors, when able, had used China's UnionPay after cards issued by Russian banks using U.S. payment firms Visa and Mastercard stopped working, he said.

Visa and Mastercard announced Saturday they were suspending operations in Russia over its invasion of Ukraine. Russia has called its actions there a "special operation."

Though Thailand was among 141 countries that backed a United Nations resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of Russian troops, it has not imposed any sanctions on Moscow.

Bhumikitti said hundreds of people from Ukraine were also stranded, mainly due to airport closures there.

He said efforts were being made to get stranded Russians onto flights to Moscow on Middle Eastern airlines and to arrange repatriation flights.

A proposal was being considered to allow the use of cryptocurrency for payments at hotels, flights and other businesses in Phuket, he said.
