Elwell, Pereda shine in weightlifting

By Jojo Santo Tomas
Pacific Daily News

Ethan Elwell is back doing local weightlifting competitions and Guam's current heavyweight female Brittney Pereda won both individual competitions during the Lift Heavy, Lift Fast, event by General Fitness Competition held Feb. 6 at the Hotel Nikko Guam Pavillion.

Elwell is a former CrossFit Fittest Teen in Asia in 2018, the same year he placed in the top five at the CrossFit Games.

Pereda picked up weightlifting more than a year ago and has quickly risen through the ranks. She already has one showing for Guam in a virtual weightlifting event, and hopes to continue as long as she can.

Although Brittney Pereda is fairly new at weightlifting, she has already established her local dominance in the sport. She is shown receiving the heaviest snatch award following a recent fitness event at the Hotel Nikko Guam pavillion.

North American-born Chinese Olympians shine

BEIJING (AP) — NHL great Chris Chelios' son is playing for China at the Olympics, though you won't see the Chelios name on the roster.

Like other foreign-born athletes representing China at the Beijing Games, Jake Chelios will play under a Chinese name. In any official Olympic context, he will be Jieke Kailiaosi.

"My new name? I love it. It's cool. It's part of the experience. Since I've been over here, everything's kind of new for me, and that's the exciting part about playing overseas," Chelios said at Saturday's practice. "I know two or three words (in Chinese), but I took six years of Spanish in high school. I couldn't even learn that, so I didn't even try."

China is eager to popularize winter sports and to be represented across the Olympic program, even in events where it hasn't had much success in the past. In hockey, freestyle skiing and figure skating, China has athletes who were born and raised in North America.

The naturalized athletes come from a variety of origins. Unlike Chelios, many of them have Chinese heritage and see the 2022 Games as a way to strengthen a connection to their family origins. The most famous is Eileen Gu, on the Olympic program as Gu Ailing, a freestyle skier who has said she chose to represent China because she thought she could have a bigger impact as a role model.

She made her point on Monday, landing a spectacular 1620 jump to win the gold medal in the big air event.

Vancouver-born goaltender Kimberly Newell is another in the spotlight in China after making five saves in a shootout to earn China a 2-1 win over Japan in women's hockey on Sunday. She's playing as Zhou Jiaying, and explained that Zhou is her mother's family name and Jiaying the Chinese name she was given as a child by her mother.

At the start of a conversation between Newell and English-speaking reporters on Sunday, a team staff member accompanying the goalie said she would only speak Chinese.

"I just want to do my best throughout the whole tournament. Step by step, I do my best," she said, according to the staff member's translation.

for JFK.
JFK went even lower in the final round, clocking a 7:32.90 time in that win. The Royals were the only other squad to break the eight minute mark, and they also had two second place finishes. JFK leads the division with 57 points but the Royals are hot on their heels with 55 points. Okkodo and Sanchez's mixed teams are tied for third with 46 points, and GW is in fifth with 36 points.

In the Sotteru, or boys varsity division, the Islanders boys won all three rounds. They clocked a blazing 6:50.14 in the first round, passing two boats in the staggered-start format. They earned the max 30 points on Saturday and lead the division with a total 58 points.
JFK steersman Charles White said he was motivated to perform after last week's second-place finish.
"For sure but regardless if we got first, second, third, or last, I would have given it my all either way," he said.

The Okkodo High School Bulldogs are in second in the boys division after finishing third in each of three races with 53 points. The Royals stand in third with 51 points.
Paddling action continues each Saturday at Matapang Beach in the six-week season.
