

Youth bowling league resumes

By Jojo Santo Tomas
Pacific Daily News

After a years-long hiatus, a youth bowling league and program resumed at Central Lanes Bowling Center Saturday.

The program is supported by Central Lanes, Pin-Point Guam and Storm Products Inc. it's coordinated by Joey Miranda III, who coaches, along with a handful of other bowlers under the Guam Bowling Congress.

Organizers had hoped to get more than the 15 bowlers who showed up and coaches expect more bowlers to come out this weekend, said Jay Leon Guerrero, one of the coaches.

"We want to build a pool of players to represent Guam for the future," said Leon Guerrero. "We are hoping to get more from the high school league."

Leon Guerrero coordinated the recent high school league. It was a success, with several schools entered, represented by scores of players. It was an additional stage for star bowler Evan Duenas, who averaged 230 for the season, and it led to the discovery of new talent, such as Xavier Calvo, who bowled a 200 in the finals of the preliminary round to finish just a few pins away from a medal.

The youth league and program is open to anyone 20 years old and under. Interested players need nothing other than an interest in the sport and a willingness to learn.

Players go through about an hour's worth of classroom instruction, followed by 90 minutes of bowling under coaches such as Darrell Scott, Maria Wood, Ricky Duenas, Cameron Santos and Justin Mendiola, in addition to Miranda and Leon Guerrero.

Leon Guerrero, who has ranked among the best bowlers in Asia, said he hopes to build a team in time for the Asian Schools Tournament next year, an 18-and-under tournament featuring the best juniors from around the Pacific Rim.

"The last time Guam joined that, we finished in fourth place, which is pretty awesome," he said. "We want to go back to that tournament next year and this league will help develop that team. Hopefully we can get a girls team too. There were a couple of girls from Saint Paul showing real big improvement in the high school league."

Camacho

teams to future competitions because she said that while competing as a solo fencer was rewarding, she felt a little sad watching how teams from other countries cheered on their members.

USC

Fencing is so ingrained in her future, that it played a major role in her decision to attend the University of Southern California. While the university doesn't have a fencing team, the club fencing scene in her area is extremely active, with many opportunities for training and development, she said.

And while the daughter of lawyers had vowed never to pursue law in college, getting her Juris Doctor is now back in play, thanks to her success at last year's science fair.

Wait, what?

Medicine

You see, Camacho first aspired to be a medical doctor — a dermatologist to be precise. But after taking some science classes, she realized the amount of memorization she'd need and lost interest.

Green thumb

During the pandemic, she started a garden and found an affinity with the whole life-cycle process. She loved learning about pest control and organic farming, but felt she had to have more academic backbone behind her green thumb. So first she wants a degree in business administration with a focus on real estate and finance. Then a law degree.

"But I still want to keep my science. I want to do an internship in agriculture here when I come back to Guam," she said. "What I really want is to own my own farm."

So far Anica Camacho has accomplished almost everything she's set her mind to. Add in the competitive flow she gets from wanting to be the best, plus the humility and triumph that fencing offers, she's confident that her future will include success in all her endeavors.
