compete.

“What’s happening here is normally when we meet young alumni, the young players, they always come up and always talk about how good we come out and support the tournament and that we’re an inspiration to them,” Martinez said.

He also said that he takes the time to continue inspiring the younger alumni on how to continue carrying on the legacy of the school.

“I always bring this thing up: Where would you be in

50 years from now? Then they can sit down and say, ‘If this guy can make it up to 75, and I got 50 more years to do it, I’m gonna do my best to play 50 years of basketball.’ That is the inspiration,” he said.

Generations

Martinez also noted that the tradition to play for the alumni tournaments passes through generations. He and Anderson had sons competing in the tournament the same day.

“Everybody just wants to come out,” Martinez said.

He didn’t just think it was due to family tradition, but the brotherhood and the camaraderie that the school instilled.

“It’s something; the brotherhood is there. Whatever we do out here is reflected to the other brotherhoods that are younger than we are, and we want them to carry that forward,” he said. “It’s a tradition and we’re proud to be a part of that.”

The tradition also will expand in an upcoming event.

“Because of our number of years since we graduated, we have developed our boys, our younger kids, that went to school here,” Martinez said. “So, we developed the father, son and grandson tournament.”

Martinez said the event will have one game set aside for the father, son and grandson tournament.

“We took our team, the guys that we have, and we split it in half,” Martinez said.

The father, son and grandson tournament is set for July 6, 2022 Summer Basketball Tourney.

strong guys in the lineup and ended up going down on some simple things. It can be heart-breaking but I’ve definitely been there before,” Perez said.

One of most challenging courses was called “the ninja killer.” Competitors needed to stand on two bowling balls set on a plank and move while balancing to reach the other point of the plank. This was one of the courses that took out most competitors, according to Perez.

Mike Quitugua was the only person to conquer the ninja killer.

“That was an epic moment,” Perez said. “Overall, he got second place and it was a single point that separated him from a first-place finish,” Perez said.

Quitugua was runner-up to Dylan Baker.

What also surprised Perez was the support system the competitors had, not just with friends and family, but each other.

“Each competitor cheered each other on. How they supported each other created such a good vibe,” Perez said. “This is what the ninja community is all about and I am so happy everyone is coming together to create the ninja community here on island.”

Perez said he’s found “a few really good hopefuls for Team Guam” and that he would hold more competitions in the future.
